Position of national minorities in Europe

Report¹

Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights

Rapporteur: Mr Paul STRUYE, Belgium

1. 1959 - 11th Session - Second part

A. Draft Recommendation

Having taken formal note of the Report of the Legal Committee on current legal and administrative provisions and the present status of national minorities in the Member States of the Council of Europe (Doc. 1002);

Noting with interest that the status of the national minorities in question appears on the whole to be satisfactory;

Considering that, wherever that status is giving rise, or may in the future give rise, to disputes between two or more Member States, these States should try to compose their differences in the spirit of the Statute of the Council of Europe, the European Convention on Human Rights and any other international legal undertakings contracted by them,

Recommends that the Committee of Ministers invite those Member Governments between whom disputes exist, or may in the future arise, concerning the status of national minorities, to seek a satisfactory settlement through bilateral negotiations with due respect for the supremacy of the law, or, should these negotiations fail, by the application of the procedure laid down in the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes.

B. Explanatory Memorandum

1. Introduction

1. In Resolution 136 (57) of 29th October 1957 the Consultative Assembly asked the Legal Committee for a report on " the laws and regulations in force, and existing situations in this regard " concerning national minorities in Member States of the Council of Europe. In accordance with this Resolution, the Report is required to state the extent to which progress could be made " to ensure satisfaction of the collective interests of the national minorities themselves, to the fullest extent compatible with safeguarding the essential interests to the States to which they belong ".

2. In order that the Legal Committee should be in a position to draw up the report, the Assembly, by its Resolution 136, invited the Governments of Member States of the Council of Europe which were concerned in such matters to forward to the Secretary-General all relevant information.

3. Resolution 136 was the result of work which goes back to the early days of the Assembly. A Report presented by M. Teitgen on 5th September 1949, for instance, on the conclusion of a European Convention of Human Rights(Doc. 77 of 1949), raised the question of defining the rights of national minorities.

4. Subsequent action taken by the Assembly in this field was mentioned in the Legal Committee's Report presented by M. Rolin in October 1957 (Doc. 731).

5. It is apparent from this Report that the Assembly and the Legal Committee were cautious in their approach to the national minority problem in Europe. Realising that it called for most careful consideration, both the Assembly and the Legal Committee were anxious not to propose or decide anything which might give offence or harm the spirit of collaboration or of good understanding between the Members of the Council of Europe. For instance, Mr. Dickson's proposal(Doc. 508) which first gave rise to the Committee's action and sought to set up a permanent Sub-committee to report annually to the Consultative Assembly on national minorities and groups was not adopted. The Legal Committee considered that the setting up of such a permanent Sub-committee would lead to a procedure similar to that applied in the League of Nations for the protection of minorities. As is generally admitted, the system created by the League of Nations tended to aggravate rather than alleviate difficulties. With this in mind, Resolution 136 was drafted by the Legal Committee and adopted by the Assembly.

6. The Committee of Ministers did not find it possible to furnish the information called for in Resolution 136. In reply to my written question on this subject, of December 1958 (Doc. 923), the Committee of Ministers stated on 29th January 1959 (Doc. 955) : " The Committee of Ministers has continued its careful consideration of the request for information put forward by the Assembly in its Resolution 136 (1957) concerning the situation of national minorities in Europe. The Committee of Ministers feels unable to accede to the Assembly's request for information contained in this Resolution. The view expressed in the Committee was that members of the Consultative Assembly would have no difficulty in obtaining through their national Parliaments the necessary information on national legislation relating to minorities in their territories, without the intermediary of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe. It also emerged from the debate that there was a concern to avoid raising unnecessarily a very delicate question, the discussion of which in public is likely to cause more harm than good. "

7. As the necessary information was not forthcoming from the Member Governments, the Legal Committee was obliged to obtain it through the national Parliaments and through the Secretariat of the Council of Europe. The information which forms the substance of the present Report refers in general only to basic laws or Ministerial orders, leaving regulations and practice aside unless they are of special importance as regards the situation of the minorities concerned. Scope and content of the Report

8. In this Report I have tried to be as objective as possible. I have remained strictly within the Legal Committee's terms of reference, the instruction being to present a survey of the laws and administrative orders governing the status of national minorities in Europe. I have refrained from commenting on any but the legal aspect.

9. In accordance with the decision taken by the Legal Committee, the Report is thus confined to a study of the laws in force in Austria, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany and in Italy, relating to national minorities whose status is in part governed by an international agreement. Austria

10. There are in Austria two minority groups whose situation is at least in part governed by international agreement. One of these consists of Austrian nationals speaking Czech or Slovak, the other of Austrian nationals of Slovene or Croatian origin.

11. In a general way, persons belonging to these national minorities are protected from discrimination on grounds of nationality by the European Convention on Human Rights (Article 14; see Appendix I), which was ratified by Austria on 3rd September 1958. This safeguard is rendered the more effective in that Austria recognised on that date the right of individual application under Article 25 of the Convention as well as the compulsory jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights under Article 46. Articles 7 and 8 of the Austrian Constitution, (Appendix II) Article 19 of the 1867 law on procedure governing individual freedom, together with Articles 63 and 66 of the 1919 Treaty of Saint Germain-en-Laye (Appendix III), which, imported into the Austrian Constitution by Article 149, forms part of the constitutional law of the Austrian Republic— all these offer further safeguards against all discrimination within Austria. Furthermore, by Article 6 of the State Treaty of 15th May 1955 (Appendix IV), Austria undertook that no law in force would, either by its wording or its application, involve any discrimination whatsoever against members of national minorities.

12. As regards the respecting of the collective interests of national minorities in Austria it should be mentioned that in general all the groups of national minorities in Austria under Article 68 of the Treaty of St. Germain, enjoy a fair share in the allocation of grants from public funds for educational, religious or charitable purposes. Since 1921 the Czech—and, furthermore, Slovak-speaking minorities have had available in Vienna primary education in their own language, by virtue of Article 20 of the Treaty concluded in 1920 between Austria and Czechoslovakia on questions of nationality and protection of minorities (Appendix V).

13. As for the Slovene and Croatian minority in Carinthia, Burgenland and Styria, their collective interests are protected by a set of provisions in Article 7 of the State Treaty of 15th May 1955. This Article provides that these national groups have special rights, particularly in matters of education. It states, for instance, that such persons have a right to primary education in Slovene or Croatian and to a proportionate number of secondary schools. Austria is pledged, moreover, to supervising school syllabuses and to arranging inspection in Slovene and Croatian schools.

14. In fulfilment of these commitments, a federal law concerning the education of minorities in Carinthia (Appendix VI) has been in force since 14th April 1959. The authorities in Carinthia are under an obligation to give effect to this law within three years of its promulgation. It is interesting to note that the law covers only the organisation of primary and secondary education in Slovene for the Slovene minority in Carinthia, although the State Treaty requires, in addition, education in Croatian for members of the Croatian minority in Burgenland. According to the law any child of Slovene parents residing in one of the communes which, in 1958-1959 already had bilingual education, has a right to education in Slovene provided its parents expressly make this request. This condition is in keeping with Article 2 of the Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights. Primary education, in Slovene is given either in a school where Slovene is the sole language or in schools where two languages are used. A secondary school is to be specially established in Carinthia where the only language used will be Slovene. The law makes provision for trained teachers and school inspectors at both levels of education.

15. By Article 7 of the State Treaty of 15th May 1955 Austria is obliged to recognise Slovene and Croatian as official languages, besides German, in administrative or jurisdictional areas of Carinthia, Burgenland and Styria where there is a Slovene or Croatian population or a mixed population. Public notices and sign-posts, etc. must be in Slovene or Croatian as well as in German. On 19 th March 1959, the lower House (Nationalrat) passed a Bill concerning the official languages in magistrates' courts in districts of Carinthia having a mixed population (Appendix VII). In these courts Slovene is to be an official language. This law came into force on 14th April 1959.

16. Among other rights granted to the Slovene and Croatian minorities under the State Treaty is their equal eligibility with other Austrian nationals for educational, administrative and legal appointments in those areas, which means they can enter the civil service and the magistrature.

17. Moreover, the State Treaty expressly makes it illegal to engage in any activity aimed at depriving the Croatian and Slovene population of their national character and their minority rights. Denmark

18. The constitutional law of the kingdom of Denmark of 5th June 1953 gives the German minority in Denmark all basic human rights including equality before the law with other Danish nationals. The German minority in Denmark is thereby safeguarded against discrimination on grounds of language. On the international plane this safeguard is reinforced by the rights enumerated in Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Denmark has been bound by the Convention since 3rd September 1953 and has recognised the right of individual application in accordance with Article 25 thereof; consequently any Danish subject can have direct recourse to the European Commission of Human Rights concerning any alleged violation of such rights.

19. Danish subjects belonging to the German minority, and the minority as a whole, have certain special rights. These rights are recognised by the Danish Government not only in legal provisions and administrative orders but also by a " Declaration on the status of the German minority in Denmark made at the conclusion of negotiations with the German Government on 29th March 1955 ". This declaration, which is in the nature of an international instrument, was approved by the Danish parliament (Folheting) on 19th April 1955 (Annex VIII). In the educational field, paragraph 3 of Chapter II of this declaration recognises the collective right of the minority, " t o establish, in conformity with the law, institutions for general education and high schools (including technical colleges) as well as kindergartens ". The minority has also the right to maintain religious, cultural and professional relations with Germany and the right to profess openly its ties with German culture and the German community. Moreover, the Danish government is pledged to recommend the Danish broadcasting authority to grant the German minority appropriate facilities within the limits of current broadcasting regulations. Among the special rights accorded to individuals of the German minority, in conformity with the Bonn Declaration, is freedom to use the language of their choice. The use of the German language is also allowed in law courts and public offices. Federal Republic of Germany

20. The legal status of the Danish minority in Germany individually and collectively is similar to that of the German minority in Denmark.

21. The Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany dated 23rd May 1949 affords real safeguards in the matter of non-discrimination to the persons concerned.

22. The European Convention on Human Rights has been binding on the Federal Republic of Germany since 3rd September 1953. As the Federal Republic has acknowledged the right of individual application referred to in Article 25 of the Convention, all persons under its jurisdiction— including Danish-speaking German citizens— can invoke before a European authority the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Convention. These rights include a guarantee against discrimination on the ground of association with a national minority.

23. As an outcome of its negotiations with the Danish Government, the German Government by its Declaration of 29th March 1955 (Annex IX), has recognised the Danish minority in Germany, individually and collectively, as having a series of special rights. This declaration was ratified by the Parliament of the Federal Republic (Bundestag) on 6th July 1955. The rights granted under this Declaration are substantially the same as those granted by Denmark to its Germany minority. A difficulty arose, however, over the representation of the Danish minority in the Schleswig-Holstein Diet, since, as a general rule, an electoral list which does not secure 5 % of the votes cast at a general election may not be represented. By virtue of Article 3 of the Electoral Law of Schleswig-Holstein dated 19th June 1955, this clause is no longer applicable to political parties of the Danish minority. Consequently, it can now be represented in the Schleswig-Holstein Diet even if none of its parties obtains 5 % of the votes cast at the provincial general elections. Italy

24. In Italy equality before the law is guaranteed to every citizen by Article 3 of the Constitution. Moreover, all persons under Italian jurisdiction enjoy the fundamental rights set forth in the European Convention on Human Rights, which has been binding on Italy since 26th October 1955. However, Italy recognises neither the right of individual application mentioned in Article 25 of the Convention, nor the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court under Article 46.

25. There are two ethnic minorities in Italian territory which have special status by international agreement, namely the German-speaking inhabitants of the Bolzano Province and the Yugoslav ethnic group in the Zone of Trieste.

26. The German-speaking minority is covered by the so-called De Gasperi-Gruber Agreement signed on 5th September 1946 between the Italian and Austrian Governments. This Treaty, together with Annex IV, forms an integral part of the Peace Treaty with Italy of 10th February 1947 (Annex X) By this Agreement Italy undertakes in general to grant the German-speaking inhabitants of the Bolzano Province and of the neighbouring bilingual townships of the Trento Province " complete equality of rights with Italian-speaking inhabitants, within the framework of special provisions to safeguard the ethnical character and the cultural and economic development of the German-speaking element ". (Article 1 of the Agreement.) The Agreement makes provision in the above-mentioned regions for " the exercise of autonomous legislative and executive regional power. . The frame within which the said provisions of autonomy will apply, will be drafted in consultation also with local representative German-speaking elements " (Article 2); An autonomous region of this kind was created by Constitutional Law No. 5 of 29th February 1948 on the special status of the Trentino-Alto Adige region (Annex XI), which includes the provinces of Trento and Bolzano. It exercises autonomous legislative and executive power in certain spheres such as expropriation, trade, mining, agriculture, medical services, the organisation of chambers of commerce, the control of co-operatives, etc. In addition, it has power to legislate on social assistance, the organisation of regional credit institutions, etc. Within this semi-autonomous region, where the population is for the most part Italian-speaking, the two provinces of Bolzano and Trento have legislative power in certain matters, such as educational administration, low-rent housing, etc.

27. As regards access to public employment, Article 1 (d) of the De Gasperi-Gruber Agreement provides for "equality of rights ... with a view to reaching a more appropriate proportion of employment between the two ethnical groups".

28. The Agreement also guarantees primary and secondary education in German as well as parity of the German with Italian language in public administration.

29. Since the signing of the 1946 Agreement, differences have arisen between the two Contracting Parties as regards its application. These arise, it seems, from differing interpretations of the text.

30. In a note transmitted to the Italian Government on 8th October 1956, the Austrian Government maintained that Article 2 of the Agreement providing for the exercise of autonomous legislative and executive regional power "for Bolzano province and the neighbouring bilingual townships of the Trento province had not been correctly applied by Italy, which, as is known, granted regional autonomy in 1948 to an area comprising not only the Bolzano province and the bilingual townships of the Trento province, but all the rest of the Trento province with its exclusively Italian-speaking population. In this region as a whole the German-speaking population thus represents a minority (approximately 30 %). The Austrian Government also maintained that the autonomy granted to the Bolzano province was incomplete, as it applied to only seventeen matters, and that even in these matters it was practically non-existent, since most legislative measures passed by the Bolzano authorities had subsequently been annulled either by the regional authorities of the Trentino-Alto Adige or by the central Government in Rome. The Austrian Government therefore considers that Italy has not yet granted the German-speaking population the autonomous legislative and executive regional power to which it is entitled under Article 2 of the above-mentioned Agreement. Italy, on the other hand, considers that Article 2 of the 1946 Austro-Italian Agreement is not to be interpreted as guaranteeing autonomous legislative and executive power to the German ethnic group as such. In a note sent to the Austrian Government on 9th February 1957, the Italian Government pointed out that the Article in question grants autonomous regional power to the population of the Bolzano province as a whole, irrespective of the ethnic origin of its inhabitants, and the Italian authorities maintain that the Bolzano province actually enjoys such regional power. The Italian Government admits that it has been necessary to annul certain legislative measures passed by the Bolzano regional authorities because the latter had exceeded the limits of their powers. On the other hand, the Italian Government points to the fact that, in a letter of 28th January 1948 to M. Perassi, Chairman of the Subcommittee on the Status of Autonomous Regions, the representatives of the German population approved the status granted to the Trentino-Alto Adige.

31. In its abovementioned note, the Austrian Government also alleged that Italy was observing neither Article 1 (b) (parity for the German and Italian languages) nor Article 1 (d) (equality of access to public employment) of the 1946 Austro-Italian Agreement, since in the Bolzano province German was used by the public authorities only as a secondary language. As regards access to public employment, the Austrian Government considers that German-speaking persons do not have equality of opportunity with Italian-speaking persons since competitive examinations for entry to the civil service make no allowance for the peculiarities due to bilingualism in the Bolzano province. Hence, the overwhelming majority of civil servants belong to the Italian ethnic group. In its Note of 9th February 1957, the Italian Government replied that this situation was mainly attributable to the fact that the proportion of German-speaking candidates offering themselves as candidates in the examinations was too small in relation to the number of vacant posts.

32. The Yugoslav ethnic minority in the Zone of Trieste enjoys special treatment under the "Special Statute" which appears, together with Annex II, in the memorandum of 5th October 1954 concerning the Territory of Trieste (Annex XII). Under this Special Statute the Yugoslav ethnic group is granted as such a number of privileges, particularly with regard to teaching in the mother tongue. This teaching is given in kindergarten and in primary, secondary and technical schools "placed at the disposal" of the Yugoslav group. Moreover the Special Statute entitles the Yugoslav ethnic group to have its own press and its own educational, cultural, sports and social organisations. Members of the group are also guaranteed the right to use their mother tongue in dealings with the administrative and judicial authorities of the Zone of Trieste. The main feature of this Special Statute is that it provides for a mixed Italian-Yugoslav Commission "to assist and advise in all problems concerning the protection of the Yugoslav ethnic group in the zone under Italian administration and of the Italian ethnic group in the zone under Yugoslav administration"¹. The Commission is also empowered to investigate "complaints lodged and questions raised by individual members of the two ethnic groups in connection with the implementation of the Statute"²

2. Conclusions

33. The position of the national minorities dealt with in the present report seems to be satisfactory, at any rate on the legislative plane. This is particularly true of the German minority in Denmark and the Danish minority in Germany. As regards Austria, however, the Legal Committee would draw the Assembly's attention to the fact that all the legislative measures on behalf of the Slovene and Croatian minority in Carinthia, Burgenland and Styria required by the State Treaty of 15th May 1955 have not yet been introduced by the Austrian authorities, although some legislation of this kind—a law concerning the teaching of Slovene and another concerning its use in Law Courts of Carinthia—is already in force. In Italy, the situation of the Yugoslav minority in the Trieste area calls for no comment, but it should be pointed out that the De Gasperi-Gruber Agreement of 1946, which determines the status of the German-speaking minority in the Bolzano region, has given rise to a dispute as to interpretation between the Contracting Parties, namely Austria and Italy, both Member States of the Council of Europe.

34. The Committee does not think it advisable at the present time to establish in the Council of Europe a system for the protection of national minorities, such as existed in the League of Nations. The main reason for this is that the Member States of the Council of Europe have already subscribed to a collective guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms in the Convention of 4th November 1950. Article 14, of this Convention stipulates that there shall be no discrimination in securing enjoyment of the rights covered by the Convention. This clause affords protection against all discrimination, including that against members of a national minority. The other argument against reverting to the procedure employed by the League of Nations is that the situation of national minorities in the Member States of the Council of Europe appears to be more satisfactory than it was before the last war. The last and most important point of all is that, in the view of the Committee, the results achieved by the League of Nations in the protection of minorities were not very convincing. It would seem more appropriate that the settlement of any dispute, now or in the future, between two Member States should first be sought by means of bilateral negotiations conducted in the spirit of the Statute of the Council of Europe, which lays down the principle of the rule of law. If, however, no settlement satisfactory to the two States concerned can be achieved by such negotiations, the procedure for in the European Convention for the peaceful settlement of disputes should be set in motion. This is the purpose of the draft Recommendation drawn up by the Committee.

35. The two following points illustrate the scope of the draft Recommendation. First, the Committee agrees that the procedure provided for in the Convention for the peaceful settlement of disputes may be followed by the States concerned, even if they are not yet Contracting Parties thereto. Indeed, there is nothing to prevent States from agreeing to employ this procedure at any time. It goes without saying that in such a case Article 27 of the said Convention, which makes it possible to exclude disputes that arose prior to ratification by the States concerned, should not be applied. The Committee also unanimously recognised that the procedure for the settlement of disputes suggested in the draft Recommendation should not be regarded as exhaustive. If, for example, it did not lead to a satisfactory settlement, the Consultative Assembly might be called upon to examine other methods.

Appendix 8 APPENDIX VIII

Declaration by the Government of Denmark regarding the status of the German minority in Denmark, made at the issue of negotiations with the German Government on March 29th, 1955

Desiring to promote peaceful living together among the population on either side of the Danish-German frontier and thereby also to promote the general development of friendly relations between the Kingdom of Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany; and referring to Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights according to which all rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention shall be secured to everybody without discrimination on the ground of association with a national minority, the Royal Danish Government, in confirmation of the legal principles already applying to the German Minority in North Slesvig—as also expressed in the declaration made by the then Danish Prime Minister, Hans Hedtoft, on 27 October 1949 to representatives of that minority (the so-called Copenhagen Note) declares as follows :

Under Danish law—the Constitution of the Kingdom of Denmark of 5th June 1953, and supplementary legislation—every citizen, and consequently everybody belonging to the German minority, irrespective of his language, enjoys the following rights and freedoms :

1. Inviolability of personal liberty,
2. Equality before the law,
3. Freedom of creed and conscience,
4. Freedom of expression and of the press,

11. The right of anybody who believes that his rights have been violated by the authorities to invoke the protection of the courts of law,

In consequence of these principles of law, it is hereby established as follows :

1. Persons belonging to the German minority and their organisations may not be prevented from using, orally or in writing, the language which they prefer. Use of the German language before the tribunals and administrative authorities is subject to the legislative provisions on the matter.
