Your Excellency,
dear Secretary General,

As a European country strongly committed to human rights and the rule of law and in view of the profound impact on the political architecture of our European continent inflicted by Russia's illegal aggression against independent Ukraine, I have the honour to inform you that the Republic of Kosovo is hereby applying for full membership of the Council of Europe.

Having been recognized as an independent state by more than 73 per cent of the member states of the Council of Europe since its independence on 17 February 2008, and consonant with its identity as a European country the Republic of Kosovo is single-mindedly pursuing the path of full integration into the legal and political frameworks laid down in the Statute of the Council of Europe and other European and Western organizations.

Throughout its existence as an independent state the Republic of Kosovo has enshrined basic human rights in its constitution, of which some key elements are directly linked with the Council of Europe. Please allow me to highlight some of these provisions.

Article 22 of the Constitution of the Republic of Kosovo ensures the direct effect of key documents of the Council of Europe, such as the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the Istanbul Convention. This article of the Constitution also gives direct effect to key UN documents such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhumane or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Article 53 of the Constitution directly links legal interpretations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Kosovo to the European Court for Human Rights by stating: „Human rights and fundamental freedoms guaranteed by this Constitution shall be interpreted consistent with the court decisions of the European Court of Human Rights.“

Following its path towards becoming a fully-fledged member of relevant European and international institutions, our country has further strengthened the rule of law since its general elections in 2021. As a result of all the efforts of our still young Republic, Kosovo has been ranked first in the Western Balkans by the World Justice Report on Rule of Law and second in the region by the Transparency International Index for 2021 with the highest single increase of 17 ranks.

Fundamental rights for women are promoted in our country by adherence to the above mentioned conventions but also by legal provisions that ensure at least 30 per cent of the members of our national and local parliaments have to be women. In our current national parliament the ruling coalition can count on more than 40 per cent female members of parliament.

The empowerment and protection of non-majority communities in public institutions include many constitutional guarantees and are correctly and widely perceived as the most far reaching in Europe.

Our Constitution's provision to assign 20 out of 120 seats of the parliament exclusively for minorities (10 seats for the Serb community, and 10 for the Bosniak, Turkish, Egyptian, Roma, Ashkali communities), while at the same time preserving their right also to compete for the remaining 100 seats represents a unique degree of guarantees for minorities in the electoral process. Regardless of the outcome of the elections, the Serb community has the right to elect one member of government, while two additional members of government are selected from the other communities. Nowhere in the region or Europe for that matter can such a level of inclusion of minorities be found.

Members of non-majority communities enjoy the legal right to participate in our public administration on a national and local level. Similar guarantees are enshrined in our Constitution for minority communities regarding language and schooling especially on the local level.

All these and a series of other provisions ensure that empowerment and protection of minority communities in Kosovo exceed those of most other countries in Europe.

These provisions and the health of our democracy serve as proof that European values can be the formula for overcoming even a most tragic past and for providing a better future for all, as has been the case in the very founding of the Council of Europe itself.

There is no other country in the region or in Europe whose citizens produce survey after survey approval rates for European and Western values by up to more than 90 per cent. Our identity is a profoundly European one. Kosovo is eager to contribute to the common good of our common continent.

We further believe that a decision by the Council of Europe to admit the youngest country in Southeast Europe could be a strategically decisive step towards stabilizing the region and preventing it from relapsing into conflict. We are confident that such a decision would help the region to come to terms with the past and to open up a new era of ever closer cooperation in many areas of mutual benefit.

The young and European-minded people of Kosovo aspire to belong to the family of nations in the Council of Europe. With the exceptional experience of a tragic recent past defined by war and genocide, but at the same time proving in surveys to be still the most optimistic and most European country in the region, Kosovo considers itself amply qualified to contribute to a further strengthening of Europe and its indispensable values.

We are grateful for the support the Council of Europe and many of its member states are providing to our country, its institutions and our vibrant civil society in pursuing this European path.

Kosovo is both ready and able to fulfil all membership requirements under Articles 3 and 4 of the Statute of the Council of Europe and to become a valuable member of the Organisation.

Therefore please allow me to conclude by expressing our deeply felt aspiration and our wish to join the family of European nations in the Council of Europe.

I avail myself of this opportunity to present to you, Madame Secretary General, and the members of the Committee of Ministers, the assurances of my highest consideration.

Sincerely,

Donika Gërvalla-Schwarz
Deputy Prime Minister
Minister of Foreign Affairs and Diaspora
